Where There is Deficiency

In the alkali reserve of the body with its attendant headaches, lassitude and debility, a rational system of alkalinization is available in

Kalak Water

The alkali depletion associated with pneumonia and influenza suggests the use of Kalak Water because in this way it becomes possible to supply those elements needed for maintaining a normal alkali reserve.

Where the patient shows a tendency towards acidosis, Kalak Water may be conveniently substituted for the regular drinking water. Kalak Water contains bicarbonate of sodium, potassium, calcium and magnesium. It is the strongest alkaline water of commerce.
